DEFENDANT SEA HUNT BOATS, INC.'S MEMORANDUM OF LAW
IN SUPPORT OF MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT*INTRODUCTION

Defendant Sea Hunt Boats, Inc. ("Sea Hunt") has moved the Court to enter summary judgment in its favor on the plaintiff's Complaint because the plaintiff cannot produce evidence of a defect in the subject product in this complex products liability case. The case arises out of the capsizing of a Sea Hunt Navigator 22 boat outside of the Boston Harbor Islands on May 25, 2000. In their accounts of the incident immediately after the accident the boat owner-operator and passenger stated that their vessel was struck by an unusually large wave which came upon the vessel suddenly, causing the boat to capsize. None observed any problem with the boat in several hours of use before it capsized.

The plaintiff filed suit against the boat manufacturer and the retail seller alleging that each is liable for negligence and breach of implied and express warranty by reason of an alleged unspecified defect in the boat which allegedly caused the boat to capsize under unremarkable conditions. Over the course of the present lawsuit, Sea Hunt repeatedly sought identification of the alleged defect in the boat which the plaintiff contends caused her decedent's accident and harm. The plaintiff resisted Sea Hunt's efforts to determine the alleged product defect, with the evident intent that expert witness disclosure would outline the plaintiff's theory of product defect. However, the plaintiff did not disclose an expert witness within the time ordered by the Court.

The Court should enter summary judgment in favor of Sea Hunt. The plaintiff can provide no evidence of product defect, nor of causation and therefore cannot prevail.

STATEMENT OF RELEVANT FACTS AND ALLEGATIONS.

Sea Hunt incorporates and relies on its Statement of Material Facts Not In Dispute filed in support of its motion for summary judgment.

Sea Hunt is a manufacturer of pleasure boats, including the Navigator 22 model. During the early Spring of 2003 co-defendant Gregory Zilberman purchased a Navigator 22 from co-defendant Tropicland. On May 25, 2003 Zilberman, Chizhik (the plaintiff's decedent) and Lashgari (a third passenger) left Weymouth in the Navigator 22 for a day of fishing in Boston Harbor. The anglers tried a number of fishing areas before stopping to drift and fish outside of Outer Brewster Island. Zilberman had used the Navigator 22 on several prior occasions and had had no trouble with performance. Zilberman had no difficulty with the Navigator 22 on the day of the incident in the hours that led up to the incident.

Zilberman brought the Navigator 22 to a stop to the south of Outer Brewster Island, just beyond the reach of surf, parallel to the shore. Zilberman allowed the boat to drift as he and his passengers attempted to cast fishing lines toward the island and into the surf. Zilberman left the helm and was fishing with his back to the open ocean and facing the island. Chizhik was wearing a personal flotation device, though one was available on the boat for his use.

The Navigator 22 capsized, throwing its 3 passengers into the water. No person present the boat is aware of any defect in the boat to which the capsizing can be attributed.

After a short time clinging to the side of the Navigator 22 and talking with Zilberman Chizhik expired. Zilberman and Lashgari remained atop the floating overturned boat until they were rescued by a passing vessel. The plaintiff's decedent's body was recovered by the United States Coast Guard and the Navigator 22 was left on or near rocks on or near Shag Rock. The Navigator 22 was never recovered and was not preserved.

Zilberman's deposition was taken by Sea Hunt's attorneys. At his deposition Zilberman testified that he had no problems with the Navigator 22 before the accident. Zilberman testified that he does not know what caused the boat to capsize, though he suspects that it was a large wave.<sup>1</sup>

Soon after the accident, Lashgari stated to news media that a huge wave had unexpectedly caused the Navigator 22 to overturn. Lashgari also provided a recorded statement to Zilberman's investigator which described a huge wave that had struck the boat and caused it to capsize. Lashgari later denied that he had seen any large wave on the day of the accident. Lashgari does not know what caused the boat to capsize, but asserts that something must be wrong with the boat.<sup>2</sup>

After suit was filed, Sea Hunt made repeated and sustained efforts to determine the theca

<sup>1</sup>Soon after the subject accident, Zilberman purchased a second Navigator 22 which was identical to the Navigator 22 lost after the accident. He has now used this Navigator 22 for several years without incident.

<sup>2</sup>After giving statements to news media and to Zilberman's investigator concerning a large wave which caused the Navigator 22 to overturn, Lashgari retained the plaintiff's attorney and asserted a claim against Zilberman, Sea Hunt and Tropicland for monetary damages.

of product defect alleged by the plaintiff in support of her claim. The plaintiff, through counsel, resisted disclosing her theory of product defect, presumably relying on an expert witness to identify and disclose the alleged defect. The plaintiff made no timely disclosure of expert witnesses.

Under the Court's initial discovery order [Docket #14], the plaintiff had until March 7, 2005 to disclose her expert witnesses and their reports as required by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 26(a)(2). The plaintiff's expert witness deadline was extended until May 6, 2005 when the Court allowed an assented to motion [Docket #42] to extend discovery deadlines by sixty (60) days. In the Order extending this deadline, the Court warned all parties that "no further extensions will be granted." Instead of filing her expert witness disclosure and reports on or before May 6, 2005, the plaintiff filed an Assented to Motion for Extension of Time until June 3, 2005 to Disclose Plaintiff's Expert Witnesses [Docket #46]. The Court denied the Plaintiff's motion by Order dated May 12, 2005. The plaintiff filed an "emergency" motion for reconsideration [Docket #47], reiterating the arguments previously set forth in her assented to motion. Sea Hunt objected to the plaintiff's emergency motion.

On June 3, 2005, the plaintiff filed her purported expert witness disclosure, almost a month after the deadline for doing so (May 6, 2005) expired. The plaintiff made this filing in spite of the Court's denial of her request for an extension of time to do so. Sea Hunt moved to strike the plaintiff's purported expert witness disclosure.

Since the time for deposing the plaintiff's expert witnesses permitted by the Court's amended scheduling order had not passed on June 3, 2005, Sea Hunt served notices of deposition of the plaintiff's late disclosed experts for a date still within the existing deadline. The plaintiff notified Sea Hunt of her inability to produce the expert witnesses for deposition within the time remaining.

ARGUMENT.

I. THE STANDARD OF REVIEW FOR A MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT.

A principal purpose of the summary judgment rule is to isolate and dispose of factually unsupported claims or defenses, and the rule should be interpreted and applied in a way that allows it to accomplish this purpose. See Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323-24, 106 S.Ct. 2548, 2553 (1986). Summary judgment is proper where “the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.” Fed.R.Civ.P. 56. A material fact creates a genuine issue for trial “if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the non-moving party.” Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 2510 (1986). Once the moving party has pointed to the absence of adequate evidence supporting the nonmoving party’s case, the onus is on the nonmoving party to present facts that show a genuine issue for trial. See Serrano-Cruz v. DFI Puerto Rico, Inc., 109 F.3d 23, 25 (1st Cir.1997); LeBlanc v. Great American Ins. Co., 6 F.3d 836, 841-42 (1st Cir.1993), cert. denied, 511 U.S. 1018, 114 S.Ct. 1398 (1994). “A party opposing a properly supported motion for summary judgment may not rest upon mere allegations or denials of his pleading, but must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial.” Anderson, 477 U.S. at 256, 106 S.Ct. at 2514; Fed.R.Evid. 56(e).

II. THE COURT SHOULD GRANT SEA HUNT SUMMARY JUDGMENT BECAUSE THE PLAINTIFF CANNOT PROVIDE EVIDENCE OF A PRODUCT DEFECT WHICH COULD SUPPORT A FINDING OF NEGLIGENCE OR BREACH OF WARRANTY AT TRIAL.

A. Absent Evidence Of A Product Defect Within the Understanding Of A Jury From A Qualified Fact Witness, The Plaintiff Must Produce Expert Witness Testimony Prevail At Trial.

The Court should grant Sea Hunt summary judgment because the plaintiff cannot prove a manufacturing defect in the Navigator 22 nor any material breach of warranty by Sea Hunt in relation to this boat. Since the only witnesses to the accident can identify no defect in the boat which supports the plaintiff's allegations of liability, and since the plaintiff did not disclose expert witnesses or the results of any tests or reports within the time ordered by the Court, the plaintiff cannot prevail and Sea Hunt is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

There is no evidence whatsoever of a manufacturing defect in the Navigator 22 involved in the plaintiff's decedent's accident. No witness to the accident observed any difficulty or shortcoming in the boat or its performance before the accident. As the boat was lost immediately after the accident, and not preserved by any party there can be no proof of any manufacturing defect particular to that boat. Accordingly, Sea Hunt presumes the defect alleged by the plaintiff is a design defect. The plaintiff has the burden in design defect cases to show that the manufacturer failed to exercise reasonable care to eliminate avoidable or foreseeable dangers to the users of the product. See Morrell v. Precise Engineering, Inc., 36 Mass.App.Ct. 935, 936, 630 N.E.2d 291, 293 (1994) cit. Uloth v. City Tank Corp., 376 Mass. 874, 880-881, 384 N.E.2d 1188 (1978). A product with a design defect is "not reasonably fit for the ordinary purpose for which such products are used." Morrell, 36 Mass.App.Ct. at 936, 630 N.E.2d at 293. The test for whether the product is defective is "one of reasonableness rather than one of perfection." Id.; Smith v. Ariens Co., 375 Mass. 62

624, 377 N.E.2d 954 (1978).

Under Massachusetts law, expert testimony may not be required in cases where the jury can find a design or manufacturing defect based on the testimony of the injured party or witnesses to the injury causing event. Hochen v. Bobst Group, Inc., 290 F.3d 446, 451 (1st Cir. 2002); Smith, et al. v. Volvo, 625, 377 N.E.2d 954. “In cases in which a jury can find of their own lay knowledge that there exists a design defect which exposes users of the product to unreasonable risk of injury” expert witness testimony may not be required. Id.; Morrell, 36 Mass.App.Ct. at 936, 630 N.E.2d at 2. However, where, as here, the nature of the design defect or breach of warranty and its causal relation to the accident are complex, the alleged existence of a product defect and the issue of causation are appropriately the subject of expert testimony. Hochen, 290 F.3d at 451; See Goffredo v. Mercedes-Benz Truck Co., 402 Mass. 97, 103-104, 520 N.E.2d 1315, 1318-1319 (1988).

When plaintiff’s counsel drafted the Complaint, he knew or should have known expert testimony was required to establish a causal link between the Sea Hunt’s allegedly defective boat and the plaintiff’s decedent’s accident. See e.g. Serrano-Perez v. FMC Corp., 985 F.2d 625, 629 (1st Cir. 1993). To establish a design defect or breach of warranty in the present case the plaintiff would presumably have to establish and prove the design characteristics of the boat, the likely parameters of performance for a boat having the subject boat’s design features and to form and support an opinion that the Navigator 22, as designed, was inadequate for the ordinary purpose for which such products are used. Absent evidence that the design of the Navigator 22 is defective and that the alleged defect in its design was a substantial factor in causing the boat to capsize, the plaintiff cannot prevail. Since the plaintiff did not disclose experts and their reports within the time permitted by the Court’s Order, the plaintiff cannot utilize late disclosed experts and cannot prevail on her claim.

B. The Plaintiff's Claim Must Fail Because She Did Not Disclose Her Expert Witnesses And Their Reports Within The Time Ordered By The Court.

The plaintiff did not disclose expert witnesses as she was ordered to do by the Court; therefore has no expert witnesses who can testify in support of her claim at trial. The Court should not excuse the plaintiff's disregard of the Court's deadline for expert witness disclosure because Court explicitly warned the parties in its Order that "no further extensions (of dates in the amended scheduling order) will be granted" and the plaintiff ignored this warning at her peril.

Case discovery deadlines are not a mere convenience for the courts and courts have authority to enforce these deadlines to ensure compliance in the future. "In an era of burgeoning case loads and thronged dockets, effective case management has become an essential tool for handling complex litigation" and the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, in recognition of this reality, "afford district courts substantial authority to enforce case-management orders." See Fed.R.Civ.P. 16(f); Toy Ventures, Inc. v. City of Westfield, 296 F.3d 43, 45 (1st Cir. 2002). The First Circuit has made plain that "a litigant who ignores case-management deadlines does so at his own peril." Id. at 46, citing Rosario-Diaz v. Gonzales, 140 F.3d 312, 315 (1st Cir. 1998). Rather, than heed the Order's warning provided by the Court, the plaintiff filed a motion for further extension in the eleventh-hour and effectively left herself no out if the Court did not break with its prior warning to the parties to allow her motion for extension.

The parties sought an extension of time of time for disclosing experts and they proposed a date for disclosure ultimately allowed by the Court. See Docket #42. The Court "is entitled to expect that the litigant will meet its self-imposed deadline" and "in the absence of excusable circumstances . . . the litigant's failure to do so warrants an inference of deliberate manipulation.

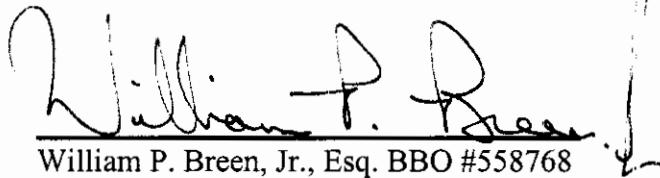

Id. at 47. Under the extension allowed by the Court, the Plaintiff had until May 6, 2005 to disclose her expert witnesses.

The plaintiff filed suit on or about January 16, 2004. Consistent with pleading requirements, the plaintiff presumably had some evidence of product defect provided by an appropriate expert witness prior to filing suit. At the least, “Some preliminary spadework should have been done before the complaint was filed.” Serrano-Perez v. FMC Corp., 985 F.2d 625, 629 (1st Cir. 1993). Although the plaintiff knew that the extended deadline for expert witness disclosure would run May 6, 2005, and that “no further extensions will be granted,” her expert did not examine a Navigator until April 25, 2005. The plaintiff had more than a year from the time she filed her Complaint to produce her expert witness report, but did not do so. Since the plaintiff lacks evidence necessary to prove Sea Hunt liable, the Court should grant Sea Hunt’s motion for summary judgment.

CONCLUSION

The Court should allow Sea Hunt’s motion for summary judgment because the plaintiff did not disclose her expert witnesses and their reports within the time ordered by the Court. Expert witness opinion evidence is necessary to establish a product defect and causation which can support a finding of liability in this complex product liability case. Without proof of a product defect, the plaintiff cannot prevail on her claim and Sea Hunt is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.
